Jump into a new future

Very good question.

At the beginning it wasn't easy, as they say:

“you have to do the hard work in order to create the foundation to getting started. “

I honestly had to structure my days in order to fit everything I needed to do around my job and sport activities.

That way I was able to arrive in the office at about 7 in the morning, work on SFM for as couple of hours until 9 and then again during my lunch break and finally a couple of hours between 8 and 10pm after dinner. This was giving me a total of 5/6 hours of work per day.

This is however my personal experience, driven by the fact that I was truly passionate about the topic from day one and it became kind of an addiction. I was however pushing myself not to do any work during the weekends as I honestly needed to rest and take my time to absorb all the things I was learning.

Having said that, you can get started at your own pace dedicating as little as few minutes per day to follow the lessons and just start working on your website, what really matters it the consistency of putting a little bit of work every single day. This is more like a marathon where you need the stamina to keep going every single. I truly believe that in order to succeed you need to have a clear reason why you are putting some effort into this.
